Chapter 1:

Finding Your Passion

Synopsis

What's the importance of passion in your life? Where does it take you?

“When work, commitment, and pleasure all become one and you reach that deep well where passion lives, nothing is impossible.”

What You Need To Find

You've got a decent eight hour a day, nine to five job producing a good salary, you've got a great family and all's good with the world. But deep within, you feel as if you're headed nowhere. The career is not in an upward direction either. You're in reality stagnating in your career and mentally and spiritually. Something is lacking.

Passion. The individual quality that textbooks and instruction manuals and business procedures won't discuss. Everybody is in such a rush to make you conform to the machine as if you are a well oiled gear, that they blank out the fact that you're a living, feeling human being. Even you've drawn a blank.

Ask yourself. If I had had a lot of money in the bank, what sort of job would I be doing? Would I cast this unglamorous career and progress to something truly exciting?

Something that I've always desired to do? And then ask yourself - how come am I not doing that currently? Is it because of peer pressure or since I do not prefer to move out of my comfort area? Do not prefer to shake my boat? You're half asleep in your boat currently and in a couple of years, you sent away to the pasture! If the boat were to rock now, you may be jarred awake and revive your senses. Your passionate senses.

In the aftermath of the recession of 2008, numerous amounts of individuals lost their lines of work. A lot of them started fresh careers and abruptly discovered that they were at last following their dream.

A lot of them are currently extremely successful in their fresh found professions.

I Believe I understand your pain.

I believe I was struggling with the same things a few years ago. I think you wish to have a clearer idea of what your goals are, what your following steps are, and ideally be able to move closer to that goal.

I believe you also wish to feel like you have command over your future, and not be victim to the whims of the economic system, your boss, or your bills.

And I believe you know if you simply knew where to begin, you may move forwards in leaps and bounds.

Because it's not that you're lazy, or not bright enough (you are a lot more valuable than you believe you are), you simply don't know what info to follow.

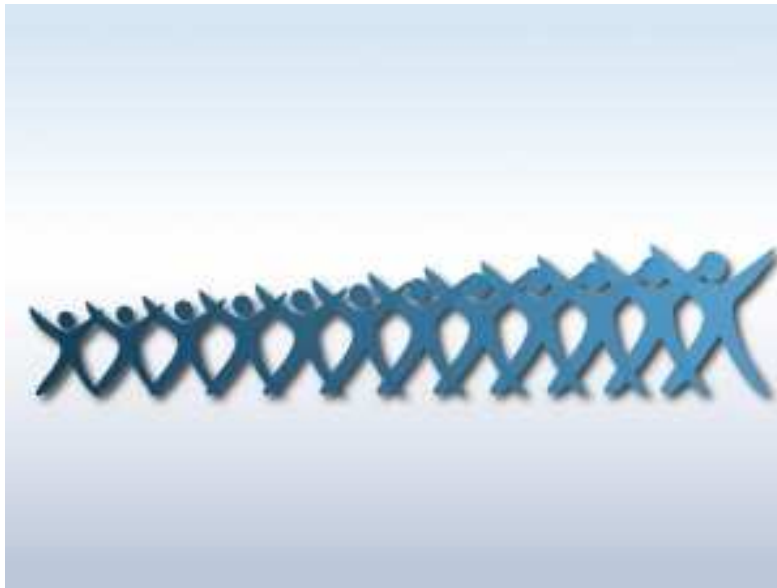

It's confusing as most of the "successes" either started eons ago or appeared overnight through affiliation with someone "big".

Designing a passionate life and living your propose, includes building a team that supports you. This might not sound like it's that crucial but it's imperative. Have you ever been truly excited about an idea, cause, job, or business idea and when you tell your loved ones and acquaintances you get a less than excited response?

This is due to the fact that the notion is yours, comes from your heart and invigorates you. That's the nice thing about life; we all are fed by something different. Once you discover your team, put a process in place to regularly meet with them. This may be done over the telephone or in person. You may meet as a group or on an individual basis. You want to know what type of support you want from every individual on your team. Have a conversation with each individual and tell them your expectations and how you want their support.

It's astonishing what may happen when you're part of a team that's energized by what you're doing. You are able to go to them for ideas, help, encouragement, and support when needed. It's hard to function in a vacuum without any outside support. It may feel hard and draining. Produce an environment of encouragement and support that energizes you and keeps you moving ahead.

Chapter 2:

Discovering What You're Passionate About

Synopsis

What precisely is your true calling in life? So you've chosen to escape from the pitiful monotony of your typical career. You would like to live to the fullest and be passionate about what you do as well as harvest all those rich rewards at the end of the rainbow, correct?

Understand What You Can Use

Now you may be wondering how exactly you discover what you're sincerely passionate about. As well you may be wondering how you separate the dreams from reality.

You may be passionate about one day becoming the King of Spain, the president of the United States, or obtaining that winning lottery ticket, or perhaps even dominating the world. Indeed, there are individuals who have desired to and have done that. An example of such would include Alexander the Great who controlled nearly the whole known world in his time. But what's your real passion?

Below are some measures you are able to take in order to find the currents that motivate you deep within:-

Understand your personal body language.

What does your body language say at your current career? Does it strain and hurt day in and day out? Do you experience panic attacks frequently?

Are you so impassionate about your career that you snooze at your desk? Do you constantly find yourself gazing at the clock when break time approaches? Then you're in the wrong career. You plainly do not have the passion required for it.

Once you work at a line of work that you're passionate about, all your headaches and cramps will dissipate. You'll discover yourself working additional hours, speaking to your companions about your work and simply be enjoying life.

What were your favorite things to do when you were a kid?

Your childhood hobbies and obsessions may suggest a true passion. Schooling and family opinions frequently steer us away from our genuine calling.

Think back and try to remember the things you enjoyed as a child, some examples may be riding bikes or gardening. If so, you might want to consider a career in the automobile or landscaping industries! So relax and recollect your childhood memories and write them down. What caused you to smile back then might still cause you to smile now and in the future as well.

What things do you enjoy doing as an adult?

You may very well have passionate side pursuits even now. Do you enjoy a graveyard shift job more than a typical day job?

Numerous corporate bosses work the night shift as chefs or night school teachers. Begin spending a couple of hours day-to-day on your pet hobby. It might just hold the key to the true you!

Chapter 3:

How To Get Stirred

Synopsis

Passion may be set loose in several ways; one way is to alter the conditions that engulf you.

Occasionally to set loose real passion in yourself, you might need to change your job to suit your aptitude better. But you might discover that you in fact love your current career, but just do not feel really passionate about it. You'll be able to analyze your situation and then attempt to make a couple of changes to re-spark the passion you once felt when you first began working.

Get The Juices Flowing

Envision yourself working passionately at your occupation. What feelings would you be experiencing? A keen concentration, clear imagination of your future, absolute domination and control over your work, a fit body and a high-spirited attitude! Then use these symptoms to recover your passion.

Determine if you perform better along with a team on the field instead of those lonely days at a desk in a cubicle. Are you more logical minded or more on the creative minded side?

Perhaps you're crunching numbers when you'd preferably work in the design section? You should request to have a revised aptitude assessment done. Make a request to your superior for a re-designation or reassignment to a more suitable section.

Perform exercises ritually for at least half an hour each day. Allow the adrenalin to pump and flow within your blood. Consume healthy food and drink plenty of water. Stop smoking and ingesting stimulants all together.

Reestablish the balance between your spirituality and physicality using techniques such as prayer or meditation. Your invigorated body will liven up your mind and passion will come back.

Expand your knowledge of your career by attending new study classes. Take time off to travel around and broaden your perspective. Take a half-pay sabbatical to add fresh qualifications to your resume. Some lateral career movement can bring an innovative twist in your way of working.

There are 2 components of consciousness. If you discuss it in terms of the quantum model, everything at its most primal level is made up of energy and of thought. And energy carries data; frequency carries data. You may say that everything is made up of 99.99 % nothing, and that “no thing” is an energy.

Then you may say that this energy that is carrying data has intelligence, and that it's the very fabric of the Universe. At its primal level it is consciousness and energy, and it's constantly coalescing and organizing itself into substantial form.

That consciousness that's producing Universes, that's keeping the planets rotating around the sun is the same consciousness that's keeping your heart beating and creating 10 million cells each second. It's likewise the same consciousness that allows a lily to bloom and a rose to flower. It's both personal inside us and Universal around us.

We understand from the experiments that intention by itself does utterly nothing. But when you couple it with an emotion, once you surrender to the emotion ahead of the literal event and don't try to analyze it or work out how it's going to occur — and you just let go and trust — it works a whole lot better. It's a balance. Once our thoughts and feelings are lined up, or our brain and body are working together, we're in a state of being. We react to who we're being, not just what we think or feel, but what we're really thinking and feeling.

Passion doesn't arrive overnight. Follow these proactive measures and you will eventually see a gradual boost in your enthusiasm. You'll start working with a freshly fired zeal which turns contagious, propelling your team mates too. You'll have consciously taken control of your life once again and the fruits of successfulness will be within view once more.

Chapter 4:

You Have To Be Interested

Synopsis

Interest is an example of an igniter of real passion.

What causes passionate individuals to work so diligently?

Where do these individuals summon their energy from?

Passion may be fueled by numerous components.

Let's look over some of the most significant sources of the Force.

What Is This Force

Interest. One of the most potent sparks of human invention has been Interest. Why does a particular thing occur? Why does lightning happen? What will the outcome be if you were to mix two chemicals? Which path will find fresh lands? The human brain is programmed to question everything surrounding it.

Breakthroughs occur once this interest turns into a passionate driving force. It acquires a persistent unstoppable energy which won't rest until an answer is discovered.

Thomas Alva Edison tested numerous variations of the electric light bulb until he discovered one that worked. Madame Curie along with her husband Pierre Curie gave away their lives to the dedication it took to unlock the mysteries of radiation.

Steve Jobs' hunt for a better computer user interface at last presented us the Apple computer with the now well known graphical user interface utilizing icons, which in time dispersed to the entire world of computing as something we know as Microsoft's Windows.

Many great adventurers of the world journeyed passionately in the pursuit of conquering fresh land for mankind. Examples of such individuals would include Christopher Columbus, Vasco da Gama, and Roald Amundsen. After hundreds of years of gazing at the moon, Neil Armstrong and Edwin Aldrin actually got to talk on the moon's surface.

Nothing is capable of stopping the power of interest and the drive that it sparks up.

Success tales in the workplace frequently develop from plain ignorance. An employee might discover that he knows nothing about a specific field and starts studying it to fulfill his personal interest. Soon enough he's got the hang of it and is teaching the world a couple of new things about it.

Get the conversation going with those who already understand a lot about your issue. For instance, find an authority and start out by telling them what you are interested in. Then ask them what their expert opinion is.

If somebody is a known authority in that field they're definitely going to have something to say back. Then let them know exactly what you are trying to accomplish so they can check it out.

As individuals, we all will experience times of lessened inspiration. These moments are commonly characterized by low energy levels, diminished motivation, lessened creative thinking and may cause a downward spiral in our basic happiness if we're not cautious.

So step out of your 'known area' and journey into the unknown. There might just be a discovery waiting there, with your name written on it.

Chapter 5:

You Must Be Challenged

Synopsis

Without having challenges within your life, you may hardly make the most of what you're passionate about. Team your passion up with the correct pursuit and you'll do far better at it.

Keep Growing

Our hunt for the generators of passion brings us to yet another potent factor - Challenge.

A challenge may be presented by an individual for himself or by outside forces. A persons' own challenge may originate from adverse conditions such as poorness or deprivation. Rags-to-riches tales have been told for centuries now.

Even Presidents of countries are not excluded from rising from humble starts and rising to their positions of force by the bold power of their passion.

Family prestige and a need to show one's heart to one's seniors and today's society may as well act as a difficult force. When a child inherits a company established by his or her father, upon growing up the child might be driven to expand that enterprise and therefore demonstrate his own prowess.

Although many companies have boards of directors and public equity, in numerous traditional societies, it's the family-driven businesses that succeed, even over hundreds of years.

Targets arranged by corporate leadership as well may be challenging to work teams. A sharp competitive spirit between contending businesses can spark a passionate pursuit of the markets.

A couple examples of passionate competition, with each trying to outperform one another in the pursuit of a better product and additional sales would include Pepsi and Coca Cola as well as Nike and Adidas. In these examples, passionate employees move rapidly up the corporate chain. Belief in the company's goals and ideals is crucial to breed passion in employees.

Occasionally the root of the challenge might lie closer to home. The passion of a woman or one's kids has the potential to motivate an individual to persevere with the intent of supplying better care and education for them. We're driven to purchase a bigger and better house, a larger and quicker car, the newest cell phones and clothes. Each of these must-haves as well act as challenges and honors for our work.

It's up to each person to decide what challenges him or her. Then just as Nike's motto states - Just do it! Your natural challenge instinct will drive you through.

Wrapping Up

Your passion may be a very beneficial tool that may take you places.

Do not smother it. Do not allow it to decrease.

Rather, provide it the correct fuel and watch it light up like an inferno. This would be the inferno of your accomplishment.

Most humans sit around, waiting to be inspired. The reality is, there is a whole domain out there filled with countless things that may motivate you to be awesome. For me, going on a long hike, or even taking a long walk in the deep woods refreshes my soul. I attempt and do this whenever I'm feeling uninspired.

A change of scenery is constantly a great idea to get a burst of creativity, but a good half-hour of exercise will actually boost your creativity. As a matter of fact, it boosts nearly every dimension of cognition, so exercise on a regular basis to get your blood (and creative juices) coursing.

What is it for you? Choose, and then go do it!

All the best to you!
